

BLACK/WHITE ORATORIO

Robert Lax & John Beer

Introduction

Black/White Oratorio is intended for performance by a chorus of 9 or 12 people, divided into three equal groups. The First Group occupies center stage, the Second Group to its right, the Third Group to its left. The First, Second, and Third Soloists are each members of the corresponding group. Soloists should step out from the group to present their solos and return at the solo's conclusion. All performers should pronounce their parts as clearly as possible without striving for "expressive" delivery.

A leader or conductor should be positioned so that all performers can see him or her without effort. The leader's movements should be as unobtrusive as possible, sufficient only to coordinate the performers' reading.

Simply "Chorus" refers to all performers except relevant soloists.

Text written in more than one column for a single voice or unison voice should be read from top to bottom until either "--" or "--," and then from left to right, i.e.

text	one	single	voice
written	column	voice	should
in	for	or	be
more	a	unison	read
than

as indicated above. Where multiple voices are indicated at the head of multiple columns, the passages should be read simultaneously, coordinated as indicated.

-- indicates a break between sections and should be read as a short pause. -- indicates a merely typographical break and should not be read as a pause.

Note: I was Robert Lax's assistant on the island of Patmos between 1996 and 1998. One night at dinner, Lax mentioned that he was interested in putting together a performance piece based on his abstract color poems (like Black and White), poems that presented series of color words in rhythmic groupings. The interest in performance went back a long way; Lax's original literary ambition was to write comic plays, in the style of Noel Coward. The Oratorio may have fewer jokes, but the aspiration to a perfection based on timing remains. It took about six weeks to sort through color poems and assemble them into the right kind of structure, though the initial inspiration—that a chorus/soloist structure would enable progressive development of motifs—came quickly. The Oratorio has been performed twice to my knowledge, in September of 1998 at the Festival la Batie in Geneva, Switzerland (directed by Vincent Barras), and in August of 2004 for the Discrete Series in Chicago.
